

Naked in Eden

My Adventure and Awakening in the Australian Rainforest

Foreword for Naked in Eden: by Michael J. Roads:

"Every now and then a book comes along that, by its very authenticity makes you sit up and take notice. Naked in Eden: Ancient Memories in the Australian Rainforest is just such a book. As the author shares her experience of being eyeball to eyeball with a deadly snake, I felt an instant rapport. I, too, have been in this situation.

"This is a moment when not only the wrong move, but also the wrong thought can prove to be fatal. Thought sends messages to a snake faster and more subtly than the blink of an eyelid, with the snake's reaction even faster.

"To read an account of a very courageous woman healing herself in Nature, learning - and sharing through her book - many of her profound insights, can not only heal, but can also affect the very reality of your life. We are conscious Beings, and Robin's great lesson was to access this consciousness on an aware and elevated level, thus powerfully and positively affecting every cell of her body.

"We can communicate on a two way level with Nature, but we generally need to be jolted out of our complacent and apathetic relationship with life before this can happen. Robin's illness and the harsh tropical rainforest combined to provide that necessary jolt.

"I enjoyed the authors writing. I enjoyed her exploratory ramblings both in the forest of Nature and the forest of her thoughts. This book is fresh, it moves, it is uplifting, and it contains a positive contribution toward the life of anyone who reads and digests it."
